MUST HEED THE LAW.

City Teamsters Can't Ignore Wide Tire Ordinance.

Some of the teamsters employed by the city have raised a delicate point of law for the street commissioner to settle. They want to know whether they are liable to fine for violating the wide tire ordinance if they, working under instructions from the street commissioner, load more than 4,000 pounds onto their narrow tired wagons. Street Commissioner Snyder says: "The men who work for the city are just the same as any other teamsters, so far as the wide tire ordinance is concerned. If I instruct a man to put on a load of rock weighing more than the limit for narrow tired wagons, and that man is arrested, it is not my look-out. It is his business to provide himself with a wide tired wagon. I am not supposed to protect a man from arrest simply because he is working for the city. The men who work for the city will have to haul full loads as long as I am street commissioner, and if they want to take the risk of hauling more than 4,000 pounds on narrow tired wagons, it is not my business."

The law as it stands is plain enough, and its purpose is to bring about the general use of wide tired wagons. Of course if a man has a small team that can't pull more than 4,000 pounds, he may be able to get along with the narrow tires, but I do not intend to hire any teams for city work which are so small to haul big loads. For hauling tin cans, etc., out of alleys, I sometimes hire small teams, because they can't get more than a thousand pounds onto their wagons. But as a general proposition teams that work for the city must be right up to the mark. We must get the same work out of our teams that other persons or corporations do."

The firm stand which Street Commissioner Snyder has taken will probably result in a speedy exchange of wheels on the part of the teamsters working for the city. Some of the men have been of the opinion that they would wait until arrested, and then plead that they were working under instructions of a city officer, and that the city should not punish them for obeying city instructions.

Upon receiving the appeal from the would-be independent state, Acting Secretary Loomis made an investigation and secured reports from the French and Brazilian representatives, here which satisfied him that there was no war, and that the French and Brazilian claim for interference with the Brazilian claim by this government.
